Blood and Sand: Rome's gladiators

Dr Andrew Fear

Dr Fear is a lecturer in Classics at Manchester University. His main interest is in Roman history, particularly the Western Empire in what is now Spain and Portugal, and Roman warfare. A little closer to home, he has authored books on the Roman archaeology of Cheshire and Staffordshire.

Gladiatorial games have become an iconic part of Roman civilisation, but were they just games? This talk explores not only the nature of the games themselves, but also how they were a vital part of wider Roman society.
